

About Us

Today's Classmates.com is where millions of people come together to connect with friends from their past, present, and future. We see our business as "social networking for grownups." You'll see us as a vibrant and rewarding place to grow your career.

The Early Days

Classmates was founded by former Boeing engineer Randy Conrads—a man who understood the challenges of staying in touch with people who mattered to him.

Growing up in a military family, Randy moved frequently and often had to leave friends behind. As he grew older and had a hard time finding and getting back in touch with people from his past, he came up with the idea for Classmates.com and launched the site from his basement in 1995.

By September 2004, Classmates had more than 38 million registered members, with 1.4 million paying for added benefits. Before the year was out, Classmates was acquired by United Online, a California-based Internet service company that also owned Juno, NetZero, and BlueLight.com.

These Days

Classmates.com now has more than 50 million members in the U.S. and Canada who are connected on the site with friends and acquaintances from school, work, and the military.

From simple beginnings as a reunion website to our current position as the country's third largest social networking site, Classmates continues to grow and evolve. What's next? We're always looking for the next fresh idea, the next new way to add value for our members.

Working on the Waterfront

Founded in Renton, WA, we moved to the Seattle waterfront in 2009. Our building features breathtaking views of Puget Sound, close proximity to walking and biking trails, and an onsite fitness center. The Seattle Center, Space Needle, and restaurants are all within walking distance, and the world famous Pike Place Market is also close by.
